Messieurs EDES & GILL,

Be pleased to give the following extract, from a piece lately printed in London, a place in your next; as it will not be unseasonable at this day.

AS trade enlarges, dangers multiply. The more complicated a machine, the more subject to disorder and interruption. Extensive dealing makes a man dependent on the responsibility of others: and hence no inconsiderable dangers arise. Designing men are ever on the watch to insnare the unwary. And there is not always a prudent attention paid to the circumstances of the persons who sollicit credit. For the sake of enlarging the sphere of business, those are entrusted whose circumstances at least, are problematical. Indeed the most cautious and circumspect are liable to be deceived. In this age of show and profusion, no judgment is to be formed from appearances. We have daily proof that we cannot safely depend upon any of the external signs of opulence. Failures daily happen among those who rival the great in dress, houses, furniture, equipage, and all the expence of fashionable living.

The frequent BANKRUPTCIES in this country are truly alarming. Some wholesome severities seem necessary to check the progress of this increasing evil. It calls for the vigorous, and speedy interposition of the legislative power. That disgrace which, in better times, was affixed to a failure in business, deterred men, in some degree, from measures tending to so disreputable an event. This restraint is now no more. Bankruptcy is so common, that it is scarcely tho't any diminution of character. And we often see persons, whose effects bore but an inconsiderable proportion to the claims of their creditors, immediately appearing as modish, and expensive, as ever. It is not easy to observe some men's effrontery without feeling the emotions of indignation.

I would not beat hard on the unfortunate. I would distinguish between those who are insolvent, thro' losses and disappointments, arising from the uncertainty of human things; and others, who are so thro' indolence, meddling with business they were not fitted for, or wild ambition, and extravagant living. The former merit compassion; the latter, contempt and abhorrence. How unequal are the laws which inflict death on the unhappy man who openly attacks, and robs of a trifling sum; while they suffer the wretch to escape with impunity, who, with pretensions of honesty, and perhaps under the semblance of friendship, robs the unguarded, and unsuspecting of their all! What convict in Newgate ever deserved hanging with more reason or justice, than the villain who will borrow large sums of money, or draw bills of exchange, a day or two before he shuts up, when he knew his unwary unsuspecting neighbour would certainly be cheated of the whole?

I would here remark, that if men have it in their power, by a favourable change of circumstances, to pay to the full their just debts, which, thro' former incapacity, were paid but in part, tis their indispensible duty. However free from legal obligation, they are bound in conscience and equity. I say further, that tis their duty, by frugality, diligence, and cutting off the expences of living as much as may be, to endeavour that it may be in their power. Before they have thus rendered all their due, whatever they expend beyond what is necessary, to a plain, decent subsistence, is an unjustifiable waste of the property of others. The system of principles in vogue may be more lax and indulgent; but the man, be he who he may, who can dress fine, adorn his house with rich furniture, and live as tho' he was worth thousands per annum, while there are numbers in suffering circumstances thro' his default in not rendering to them their just due, is, in the judgment of common sense, a downright knave. And was it not that his face had a thick covering of brass, he would appear with a blush every time he met with any of those he was, according to the golden rule of equity, justly indebted to; tho' they could not legally lay hold of him.

Meſſieurs EDES & GILL,

HIS excellency, in his ſpeech to both houſes, at the opening of this ſeſſion, is pleaſed to inform them, "that he has regularly tranſmitted "the applications which have been made to him, "in former ſeſſions, to convene the General Court "in the town of Boſton, together with the meſ-"ſages, reſolves and votes of every kind which "have paſſed upon that ſubject; and that they "have all been laid before the King". He then adds, "This is all I could do conſiſtent with my duty."—Would it have been inconſiſtent with his duty either to his King, or this people, if he had faithfully laid before his Majeſty an account of the many and great inconveniences in holding the Court at Cambridge; at the ſame time, repreſenting to him the utter inconſiſtency of his being abſolutely obedient to an abſolute inſtruction, which that diſcretionary power the Royal Charter has veſted him with to prorogue, adjourn, or diſſolve the General Aſſembly as he ſhould judge would moſt tend to promote the public good? And had he done thus, is it conceivable, that our moſt gracious Sovereign could not have taken a kind and favourable notice of what he had ſo offered? Eſpecially, as "he is ever ready to afford a favour-able attention to ſuch petitions of his ſubjects as do not tend to injure the conſtitution, and are, in other reſpects, reaſonable to be granted." Will any preſume to ſay, it would be injurious to the conſtitution for the King to leave it with his Governor to adjourn or prorogue the General Court conformably to that diſcretionary power the Charter has intruſted him with? Or will it be pretended, that there are any reſpects in which 'tis not reaſonable he ſhould be left to the free exerciſe of this power, in compliance with the great end for which it was lodged with him? 'Tis a plain caſe, Cambridge is a very inconvenient place for the ſeſſion of the General Court; and his excellency is ſo ſenſible of it himſelf, that had not, as he ſays, "the prerogative of the Crown to inſtruct the Governor to remove the Court to ſuch place as his Majeſty may think proper been denied, he ſhould have obtained leave to meet the Court at Boſton at this time". There is a wide difference between a crown-prerogative, and a miniſterial arbitrary mandate. A ſtate miniſter may put on the guiſe of great concern left a Royal prerogative ſhould be invaded; while, at the ſame time, he has only a pique at thoſe, who can't bring themſelves to a willingneſs to ſubmit as ſlaves, without a ſtruggle, to his deſpotic pleaſure. Surely, ſo wiſe and good a King as we are favoured with, will never think "his prerogative denied", when all that has been contended for is, that his own Governor might uſe that power he is veſted with, in agreement with the conſtitution. The King's prerogative in proroguing, adjourning, and diſſolving the General Court, is entruſted by the royal charter with his Governor, to be diſcretionally exerciſed for the common good. And, in the nature of the thing, it was right and fit, it ſhould, in ſome ſuch way be intruſted. For 'tis impoſſible any King, were he as wiſe as Solomon is ſaid to be, ſhould be able, at the local diſtance we are from Great-Britain, to exerciſe this power in conſiſtency with the public welfare, from which the exerciſe of prerogative ought in no caſe to be ſeperated. It would be diſhonorary to our moſt gracious Sovereign to imagine, that he would appoint a Governor not capable of knowing how to exerciſe the Royal Prerogative, with reſpect to adjourning, proroguing, and diſſolving the General Court; nor would it be leſs diſhonorary, if, after the appointment of ſo capable a one, he ſhould put him into leading ſtrings, manufactured at a thouſand leagues diſtance, and not ſuffer him to move a ſtep but as guided by them? This would be to make uſe of him as a mechanical inſtrument, and not as a man, whoſe glory it is to manage a truſt committed to him in the exerciſe of unbiaſſed reaſon and underſtruding, and ſo as in the wiſeſt and beſt manner to comport with the true deſign of ſuch betruſtment. I cannot be perſuaded to think, that the Britiſh King ever was, or would be, offended with our General Court, for their deſire, however repeated time after time, that his Majeſty's Governor might not be fettered, but left to act his own judgment with all freedom, in the matter of adjourning and proroguing the General Court, as he moſt certainly has a right to do in virtue of the conſtitution. All the outcry that has been made againſt the Court's denying, invading, and injuring a prerogative of the crown, I eſteem miniſterial buſtle only, to ſerve certain ends, in order to the accompliſhment of which, uſe is made of the King's name: Nor is this the only inſtance wherein that odium has been reflected on the King, which is due only to his miniſters; and the time may come, when ſuch crown-ſervants may meet with their juſt deſerts: Or ſhould it happen otherwiſe, there may be a change in their politicks. The Baronet of Net-le-m has found it to be ſo to his inſupportable diſappointment. Others may learn from him the folly of being tools to great men, who, when they have no further uſe to make of them, may leave them to fall, ſink, and die under the intolerable preſſure of their neglect, and the general contempt of the people.

POT-ASH.

The following is humbly ſubmitted to the diſpaſſionate attention of the Pot-Aſh Manufacturers, from a ſincere deſire to promote their real good.

AS the ſeaſon for making Pot-Aſh is now advancing, this is to inform all manufacturers in that branch of buſineſs, ſo very advantageous to the trading Intereſt of North-America, that a perſon in Boſton has, by many years cloſe application, found out a method to make Pot-Aſh greatly to be preferred to the method now practiced upon. By practicing on this plan the manufacturers will moſt aſſuredly find their account in it, by making and procuring much more ſalts from the ſame quantity of wood-aſhes than in the uſual method; it frees the Pot-Aſh in a great meaſure from that filth and foreign matter ſo detrimental to the conſumer; alſo, it brings the quality of Pot-Aſh nearly to one ſtandard of goodneſs, ſo that the merchant nor the manufacturer may not be ſubjected to the loſs they frequently are by means of three or four different prices of Pot-Aſh in England, according to their different degrees of goodneſs, but on the contrary, by this method, it is ſuppoſed, there will be but one price to it, it being all near the ſame ſtandard, as is the caſe with that article from Ruſſia, and upon the whole, the above plan will produce conſiderable more and better Pot-Aſh than any yet ſent from America. This being the caſe, it is abſolutely neceſſary that the manufacturers of Pot-Aſh ſhould avail themſelves of thoſe improvements, by which means, they will riſe ſuperior in that article to any other country. For further particulars enquire of the Printers.

R. Fc. 1 vid, Charter,

Messieurs EDES & GILL,

PHILANTHROP Jun. in Draper's paper of the 9th current tells us, that 'For four or five years together no body could appear in print unless he was a favourer of what he called Liberty', and therefore concludes, 'Falsehood has been imposed on the credulous readers of News papers, and has spread through the country for truth, because no one would contradict it.' What fortitude must a man be possessed of that can offer two such sentences to the eye of the public in a paper which for that space has contained nothing else in the political way? Again, why have any a mark of distinction in the signature? Was Philanthrop Junior a liberty writer? Was the True Patriot a liberty writer? Were all the scribblers in Main's Chronicle friends or favourers of what is called liberty? Blush! reformer blush at imposition, of so gross a kind!

But what are the falsehoods these credulous people have been led to believe? Why it seems, that I came from London and elsewhere, where I have informed that we labored under grievances in commerce, legislation, and execution of the wholesome laws of the land, where no such thing has been seen, felt, heard, or understood among us; and our Lancastrians in particular, has been furnished with all his prejudices from the letter of Junius Americanus, a despicable creature (as we say) who has certainly blackened some men and measures in both Englands, in such manner as defies time itself to bleach their character. And all the officious Philanthrop engaged, every one judged the friends, at least, of these respectable men, would avoid the provocation of fresh conflicts to such rankled ulcers; but luxuriant pride forever intercepts the efficacy of the most healing plaisters, and must be removed as fast as it puts forth! Indeed gentlemen, I myself who live in Boston, the centre of American politicks, have suspected we had some grievances to complain of before either Junius Anglicanus or Americanus ever published a letter on the subject to my knowledge: I don't the stamp is a grievance, I think the existence of the vice-admiralty courts a grievance, I think the captious and unprecedented treatment of our legislature a grievance; and above all, I think the alteration of how free and mutually dependent constitution, into a dependent ministerial despotism a grievance, so great, so ignominious and intolerable, that in case I did not hope things would in some measure regain their ancient situation without more blood shed and murder than has been already committed, I could freely wish, at the risque of my all to have a fair chance of offering to the manes of my slaughtered countrymen a libation of the blood of the ruthless traitors who conspired their destruction. It is here I confess (my finger) would fall with weight, let those of Dr. Y[illegible], Mr. M[illegible]n, or even Mr. A[illegible] fall how or where they pleased.

The Pieces referred to, last Week, we are oblig'd to wait.

Pepperell, April 13, 1772. THIS Day in this Place was verified the Saying of Solomon, Man knoweth not his Time: Mr. Isaac Cory, a Man near 60 Years of Age, having ferryed over two Men across Lancaster River, against his own House, and returned almost to the Shore from whence he set off; by some Accident the Canoe filled, he was immediately carried down the Current, (the River being very high, and the Water running exceeding swift) near two Miles, during which he was seen by several standing at one end of the Canoe, up to his Arm-pits in Water, the other End just out of the Water; he was heard by many calling out for Help, but none could get to him to relieve him, likely his Strength failing, and the Violence of the Stream taking the Canoe from under him, undoubtedly he sunk and was drowned; The Canoe was seen to pass over the Falls about a Mile below where he was seen last, with the Bottom up. He hath left a Widow and several Children, who 'tis hoped will improve by so shocking a Dispensation of Providence.

TEN DOLLARS REWARD.

Whereas a Fish-House of the Subscriber, has been lately broke open, and about 15 Quintals of Fall Jamaica Fish, (not fully cured, about half of which the Tails were cut) was Stolen: These are to Notify any Person or Persons, who may apprehend the Thieves, so that they may be brought to Justice, that the above Reward will be paid by JOHN GERRY.

Marblehead, March 26th, 1772.

THE Subscriber having been successful in restoring a considerable Number of Persons to Sight, many of whom had been totally blind from Ten to Thirty Years, Instances of which have been (by the Patients themselves) frequently published in this and the other News-Papers, which has induced a great Number of Persons to apply from different Parts, and some from more than one Hundred Miles Distance, many of whose Eyes have been either by Disease or Accident totally destroyed, or otherwise so far perished, as to render the very Idea of Relief ridiculous and impracticable.

To prevent such Trouble, Expence, and Disappointment for the future, the Subscriber thinks it his Duty to make the following Publication:

THAT he does not pretend to any extraordinary Skill in the Diseases of the Eyes, more than otherwise the Peculiarity, the Catarrh and connected Irritation, the Disorders he principally attempts to remove, and these by the usual Chirurgical Operations. Any Persons labouring under the Loss of Sight from either of the above Causes (if not of too long Standing,) provided the Disorder is not complicated, or the Patient too far advanced in Years, should not despair of being immediately relieved, by applying to the Subscriber in Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, who has been as successful, considering the Numbers he has operated upon, as any Oculist whatever.——The Poor will not be excluded on Account of the Narrowness of their Circumstances.——All Letters Post-paid, will be answered, and not otherwise.

HALL JACKSON.

P. S. The above Disorders are very accurately described in Mr. Sharp's excellent Treatise on the Operations of Surgery; a Book in the Hands of almost every Practitioner in the Country.
